VOL. No. 1

JULY 14, 2016

Key reasons to extract inactive data from Lotus Notes applications

The majority of accumulated data in Notes/Domino databases is inactive. This data is not frequently used, but still needs to be preserved for business or compliance reasons.

43%

of organizations are looking to preserve Notes documents outside of IBM Domino (whether migrating or not).

System performance

By off-loading old data from applications that are actively running, you can boost the application performance. And by decommissioning legacy Lotus Notes applications (those that are no longer used in day-to-day operations), you will keep your entire Domino infrastructure lean and efficient.

Costs

Extracting inactive data from Lotus Notes saves on costs associated with hardware, licenses and effort. You can consolidate Domino servers and applications, speed up the backup process and reduce the overall operating costs.

Risks

If inactive data resides on a legacy platform, or an unsupported application, it leads to a high risk of non-compliance. The risk grows as systems age. The risk also grows as Notes developers and Domino administrators leave the company. Therefore, inactive data should be extracted and archived before it becomes inaccessible.

Data retention

Data retention periods cannot be determined by your application or platform lifespan. For long-term archiving, Notes data should be detached from the original application, and saved in a format that a business person will be able to use.

Data migration

When undertaking a platform migration or application modernization project, it is much easier to migrate only the active data, instead of both active and historical data. You can reduce migration costs and risks of failure substantially by off-loading historical data from Domino databases on a regular basis.

Weird Ideas That Work Robert I. Sutton,2002-03-02 A breakthrough in management thinking weird ideas can help every organization achieve a balance between sustaining performance and fostering new ideas To succeed you need to be both conventional and counterintuitive Creativity new ideas innovation in any age they are keys to success Yet as Stanford professor Robert Sutton explains the standard rules of business behavior and management are precisely the opposite of what it takes to build an innovative company We are told to hire people who will fit in to train them extensively and to work to instill a corporate culture in every employee In fact in order to foster creativity we should hire misfits goad them to fight and pay them to defy convention and undermine the prevailing culture Weird Ideas That Work codifies these and other proven counterintuitive ideas to help you turn your workplace from staid and safe to wild and woolly and creative In Weird Ideas That Work Sutton draws on extensive research in behavioral psychology to explain how innovation can be fostered in hiring managing and motivating people building teams making decisions and interacting with outsiders Business practices like hire people who make you uncomfortable and reward success and failure but punish inaction strike many managers as strange or even downright wrong Yet Weird Ideas That Work shows how some of the best teams and companies use these and other counterintuitive practices to crank out new ideas and it demonstrates that every company can reap sales and profits from such creativity Weird Ideas That Work is filled with examples drawn from hi and low tech industries manufacturing and services information and products More than just a set of bizarre suggestions it represents a breakthrough in management thinking Sutton shows that the practices we need to sustain performance are in constant tension with those that foster new ideas The trick is to choose the right balance between conventional and weird and now thanks to Robert Sutton s work we have the tools we need to do so

Understanding Virtual Design Studios Mary L. Maher,Simeon J. Simoff,Anna Cicognani,2012-12-06 The idea of a Virtual Design Studio VDS has been around for many years In the early days establishing a way of transferring documents by file transfer was enough to establish a virtual design studio Our expectations are greater now Along with document transfer we expect to be able to work with others at a distance as if they were in the same physical room We have seen how email video conferences and shared whiteboards can provide environments in which we can do many of the things we are used to doing face to face The internet has changed the way we communicate at a personal level and now affects the way we work professionally Along with the new technology and the initial excitement we have also experienced frustration when our expectations are beyond the capability for the technology to deliver This frustration is due to the relative immaturity of software solutions to collaboration and also due to the lack of software support for designing We cannot just take a set of tools off the shelf and create a virtual design studio We first need to understand what is possible in a virtual design studio and then understand what the technology can provide At a more fundamental level we need to understand the differences between working in the physical presence of our collaborators and using technology to allow us to communicate at a distance
