

Denis de Rougemont
Love in the Western World

Translated by Montgomery Belgrave

This book was first published in France in 1939; an English translation appeared in 1940. It aroused immediate and widespread interest, and has since come to be recognized as a work of permanent importance. Because of war-time conditions, the first English edition was an abbreviation of the original French text. This second edition reproduces the whole of the French text as revised by the author, and includes much fresh material. In particular the section dealing with the Cathars, the troubadours and the Tristan legend has been largely rewritten, and the author regards this as the heart of the present version. There is also a new chapter based upon his observations during residence in the United States.

The problem with which the book deals is one that stands at the very center of our lives. The book has been described as "The History of the Rise, Decline and Fall of the Love Affair." Its theme is the historical paradox presented by the universal acceptance of marriage on the one hand, and on the other hand the enthralling attraction of romantic and passionate love that is outside marriage and socially and legally frowned upon. It begins by an examination of the legend of Tristan and Isolde, its origins in folklore, its development in medieval literature, its relation to the Doctrine of Love of the Provençal poets, its exploitation by Wagner. It compares the erotic language of Oriental poetry with that of Europe, and examines the parallels between human passion and mystical experience. It examines the significance of figures such as Don Juan and the Marquis de Sade, and discusses such matters as our contemporary attitude toward divorce, the Hollywood Ideal, eugenics, and the substitution of collective passion for individual passion as shown in the totalitarian urge toward war. In conclusion the author points to the final degradation of the myth and gives his verdict in favor of marriage.

J. M. Anderson, 2008 Denis de Rougemont's Love in the Western World has become something of a classic since it first appeared in 1939 Rougemont traces the development of romantic love from its origins in the twelfth century to its mutated condition in the twentieth His thesis is that romantic love and marriage are fundamentally opposed My central purpose he wrote in his Preface to the 1956 revised edition was to describe the inescapable conflict in the West between passion and marriage and in my view that remains the true subject the real contention of the book as it has worked out Whereas romantic love is passionate love based on eros and completely absorbed in itself marriage is an expression of Christian love or agape which recognizes and accepts the existence of others in their whole concrete reality The profanation of romantic love since its inception in twelfth century has debased the institution of marriage which formerly contained passion through Christian love Now however passion wrecks the very notion of marriage at a time when there is being attempted the feat of trying to ground marriage in values elaborated by the morals of passion Rougemont intends not only to
