H. Bradley and the History of Philosophy Ben Woodard, 2025-11-30 F H Bradley an exemplar of British Idealism offered a rich strain of idealism that has been unduly neglected for almost a century Beyond idealism's reputation as mere fanciful speculation Bradley's work plumbs the everyday difficulties of thinking a world infused with feeling of a world that never divides into easily rational fragments For Bradley our inner lives and our outer lived experience entangle and pollute one another a mess that requires collective dialectical thinking to unravel This book engages with Bradley's central problem of how to think the gap between one's experience and the structure of reality on which it is founded as one that still haunts contemporary philosophy. Not only was this pivotal to the post-Continental philosophy of the 2000s but it also remains extremely relevant for renewed interest in Spinoza and Hegel as well as for how contemporary analytic philosophy defines itself with and against metaphysics.

Is there a world out there independent of the way we experience it, think of it or talk about it? If so, can we know how it is? These questions have been a central concern of philosophy throughout most of its history and they continue to be the subject of an intense debate between realists and antirealists. In this clearly written and comprehensive book, Søren Harnow Klausen presents an argument for realism about the external world but also attempts to take the antirealist challenge seriously: a sensible realist must acknowledge the force of the skeptical objections and avoid overstating her own case. The book covers a wide range of themes from the historical origins of antirealism and the views of Berkeley, Kant, Husserl and the logical positivists to the most recent developments in epistemology and relevant empirical research in psychology, anthropology and linguistics. Topics also include the definition of realism and its relationship to semantics and theories of truth, the prospect of providing a transcendental argument for realism, inference to the best explanation, externalist theories of justification, the basis of our understanding of mind-independent reality, the relevance of evolutionary biology to the realism issue and theories of intentionality and perception.
