Myocardial Injury:

Pathophysiology of Severe Ischemic Myocardial Injury H.M. Piper, 2012-12-06 In industrialized countries ischemic heart disease is by far the most common organ specific cause of death The thrombotic occlusion of a coronary artery which had previously been severely altered by atherosclerosis is the most frequent cause of ischemic deterioration of myocardial tissue i e myocardial infarction Death of the human individual occurs when myocardial ischemia causes a critical impairment of cardiac pump function The failure of a heart with an ischemic area may be due to the amount and location of contractile tissue becoming paralyzed or even necrotic or to arrhythmias provoked by the ischemic condition or by a combination of both factors Considerable progress has been made in the development of antiarrhythmic therapy Effective tools have been developed to reperfuse ischemic myocardial tissue as soon as the patient reaches hospital However therapeutical principles for the ischemic reperfused myocardium which would specifically interfere with the state of injury of the ischemic tissue at the onset of reperfusion and avoid the apparent hazards of the reperfusion process itself have yet to be established But not only approved therapeutical concepts are lacking the pathophysiology of myocardial cell injury in progressive ischemia and under reperfusion is in itself only partly understood

Myocardial Injury John J. Spitzer, 2013-03-09 The chapters of this book represent contributions by plenary lecturers and invited symposium speakers of the Fourth Annual Meeting of the American Section of the International Society for Heart Research held on May 26-29 1982 in New Orleans Louisiana The aim of the Organizing Committee was to present an up to date picture of our knowledge of myocardial injury which would be equally useful to basic scientists and clinicians The papers of this volume are divided into two groups a those dealing primarily with techniques to study myocardial injury and b those that discuss the different types of myocardial injury The grouping of the papers within each of these headings roughly corresponds to the symposia presented at the meeting I wish to acknowledge the financial support of the National Institutes of Health Without grant HL 29149 the program could not have been financed Contributions from the following companies were also gratefully received Ayerst Laboratories Ciba Geigy Merck Sharp and Dohme Pfizer Laboratories Division A H Robbin Co Smith Kline Corporation U S V Pharmaceutical Co and The Upjohn Co My thanks are due to the members of The Organizing Committee Drs Gregory J Bagby Gerald S Berenson Alastair H Burns Harvey I Miller Robert Roskoski Jr and Judy A Spitzer for their help and support and to the Secretary of the Meeting Ms L Beatrice Abene for her excellent assistance John J Spitzer M D

Myocardial Damage Juan Carlos Kaski, David W. Holt, 1998-08-31 The spectrum of unstable coronary syndromes has been the object of steadily increasing research particularly in respect of novel diagnostic and treatment modalities Although the WHO criteria for the diagnosis of acute myocardial infarction have been known for decades there is still much debate as to the proper use of these especially the handling of biochemical markers Traditional enzymes have limitations in diagnostic power and new markers have unclarified applicability with regard to standardisation of assays and decision limits Furthermore the growing understanding of the conception of minimal myocardial damage in the borderzone between unstable angina pectoris and myocardial infarction necessitates refinement in the definitions of the various entities within the kaleidoscope of acute myocardial ischaemia There has been a strong impetus within the European Society of Cardiology to present this subject to a broad audience of cardiologists and as a consequence the theme of biochemical markers has become an important constituent of the Education and Training Programmes of the Society This
