would spin to show the passage of time as the now adult Myrna got a job as a dancer and was then discovered There would have to be a scene of her signing her new surname Loy to her MGM contract likely as several cigar smoking men looked on Later the audience would see her fight off casting couch advances earning her the reputation as the only good girl in Hollywood even as she was cast again and again in sultry vampish roles She would endure these with a positive attitude while always being on the lookout for something better Then her big break would come The camera would show her first comical meeting with William Powell and then a spinning scene of ticket after ticket being sold to their new picture The Thin Man Her star obviously on the rise ominous music would suddenly play followed by booming cannons and falling bombs A newspaper would flash on screen Pearl Harbor Bombed Then the audience would see her stride determinedly into the movie studio offices and announce to those above that her love of country superseded her career ambitions and that she would be taking the duration of the war off from making pictures Patriotic music would play as she was shown gathering clothing and giving speeches until once more the boys came marching home There would be a price to pay for her choices as she grew older but they would not fully bother the heroine who happily settled into several solid roles of perfect mother At the same time much would be made of her own sad love life with four marriages that ended in with divorces instead of children She would be seen settling cheerfully for ever smaller roles until finally the glamorous actress in the movie would grow older and her health would fail finally driving those who had long admired her work to recognize and honor her talent She would write her memoirs a charming book that was steered away from telling it all only to tell the best It could make for a classic Hollywood movie but for Myrna Loy it was life and American Legends The Life of Myrna Loy chronicles all of it Along with pictures of important people places and events you will learn about Myrna Loy like never before in no time at all marching home In the 1920s the burgeoning movie industry was starting to come into its own and while older silent film stars like Charlie Chaplin and Buster Keaton reached the peak of Hollywood some actors born near the beginning of the 20th century were ready to capitalize While actors like Humphrey Bogart and Cary Grant remain household names and actresses like Greta Garbo are still widely remembered few had careers that enjoyed the success of William Powell In a career spanning several decades Powell would receive three Oscar nominations for Best Actor for critically acclaimed movies so it is somewhat ironic that he is mostly remembered today for his association with the more famous Myrna Loy Together they starred in 14 films including the 1934 box office hit The Thin Man One thing that helped Powell's career along in the old days when Hollywood would only cast white actors in major roles no matter what the nationality of the character was supposed to be were his dark good looks
