Vanished Arizona Martha Summerhayes, 2020-09-28 The stalwart men of the Prussian army the Lancers the Dragoons the Hussars the clank of their sabres on the pavements their brilliant uniforms all made an impression upon my romantic mind and I listened eagerly in the quiet evenings to tales of Hanover under King George to stories of battles lost and the entry of the Prussians into the old Residenz stadt the flight of the King and the sorrow and chagrin which prevailed For I was living in the family of General Weste the former stadt commandant of Hanover who had served fifty years in the army and had accompanied King George on his exit from the city He was a gallant veteran with the rank of General Lieutenant ausser Dienst A charming and dignified man accepting philosophically the fact that Hanover had become Prussian but loyal in his heart to his King and to old Hanover pretending great wrath when on the King's birthday he found yellow and white sand strewn before his door but unable to conceal the joyful gleam in his eye when he spoke of it The General's wife was the daughter of a burgomaster and had been brought up in a neighboring town She was a dear kind soul The house keeping was simple but stately and precise as befitted the rank of this officer The General was addressed by the servants as Excellenz and his wife as Frau Excellenz A charming unmarried daughter lived at home making with myself a family of four Life was spent quietly and every evening after our coffee served in the living room in winter and in the garden in summer Frau Generalin would amuse me with descriptions of life in her old home and of how girls were brought up in her day how industry was esteemed by her mother the greatest virtue and idleness was punished as the most beguiling sin She was never allowed she said to read even on Sunday without her knitting work in her hands and she would often sigh and say to me in German for dear Frau Generalin spoke no other tongue Ach Martha you American girls are so differently brought up and I would say But Frau Generalin which way do you think is the better She would then look puzzled shrug her shoulders and often say Ach times are different I suppose but my ideas can never change
