

(iii) Law Governing Trade Secrets

- ✓ While trademarks, copyrights, and patents are all subject to extensive federal statutory schemes for their protection.
- ✓ There is no equivalent federal system relating to trade secrets.
- ✓ No registration is required to obtain trade secret protection.
- ✓ Most trade secret law arises from common law principles, namely, Judge-Made Case Law.
- ✓ The first reported trade secret case in the United States was decided in 1837 and involved manufacturing methods for making chocolate.
- ✓ In 1939, the Restatement of Torts adopted a definition of a trade secret.
- ✓ Many states relied on that in developing their body of case law, leading to greater consistency in the development of trade secrets law.
- ✓ Trade secrets are now discussed in the Restatement (Third) of Unfair Competition, which restates in a simple and clear fashion the law relating to trade secrets.
- ✓ Additionally, in 1979, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws drafted the Uniform Trade Secrets Act (UTSA) to promote uniformity among the states with regard to trade secrets law.
- ✓ The UTSA was amended in 1985.
- ✓ The UTSA has been adopted in more than 45 states.
- ✓ Although modifications to the UTSA have been made by various states.
- ✓ There are some differences between the Restatement and the UTSA.
- ✓ For the most part, however, the Restatement position and the UTSA are consistent in their treatment of trade secrets law.

The following definition of trade secret has been adopted by the UTSA.

Trade secret means information, including a formula, pattern, compilation, program, device, method, technique, or process that:

(i) Derives independent economic value, actual or potential, from not being generally known to, and not being readily ascertainable by proper means by, other persons who can obtain economic value from its disclosure or use.

(ii) Is the subject of efforts that are reasonable under the circumstances to maintain its secrecy.

- ✓ In sum, the law related to trade secrets is derived from case law, state statutes modeled after the UTSA.
