Middle East to the Far East and its art as well as the attitude of the Far East to Middle Eastern art In the course of historical developments the attitude and approach of the parties change significantly and bring about different results All interest in the other and outsider artworks has for a long time taken place in spite of repeated hostilities but trade for luxury goods and new ideas as well as interest in profitable merchandising never entirely stopped the flow of exchanges These exchanges were numerous and could also mean that the commercial drive and curiosity of mankind wins out over the hesitation to adopt features of foreign art and culture The mystery and lure of the exotic and the magical attraction of the foreign element can take many forms In the chapters of this book it will be shown that this fascination with foreign artistic features themes and goods can be deemed desirable and coveted can be expressed in many different ways and usher in new artistic concepts
