euphoric shattering of the self that both overhangs and underlies those fantasies In the national imaginary according to Chang racial subjects are often perceived as the source of jouissance which they supposedly embody through their excesses of violence sexuality anger and ecstasy excesses that threaten to overwhelm the social order To examine her argument that racism ascribes too much rather than a lack of humanity Chang analyzes domestic accounts by Asian American writers including Fae Myenne Ng s Bone Brian Ascalon Roley s American Son Chang rae Lee s Native Speaker and Suki Kim s The Interpreter Employing careful reading and Lacanian psychoanalysis Chang finds sites of excess and shock they are not just narratives of trauma they produce trauma as well They render Asian Americans as not only the objects but also the vehicles and agents of inhuman suffering And claims Chang these novels disturb yet strangely exhilarate the reader through characters who are objects of racism and yet inhumanly enjoy their suffering and the suffering of others Through a detailed investigation of family business in works of Asian American life Chang shows that by identifying with the nation s psychic disturbance Asian American characters ethically assume responsibility for a national unconscious that is all too often disclaimed
