Multilateral Development Banks Improving U S Leadership:

The Multilateral Development Banks Barbara Upton, 2000-03-30 Upton examines the U S policy process toward the five multilateral development banks the World Bank Group the Inter American Development Bank the Asian Development Bank the African Development Bank and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development as a case study in how the United States manages its participation in multilateral institutions The management of the U S role in these institutions is significant primarily because these institutions play an increasingly important role in the U S relationship with the developing world and because for the most part they are mature institutions being called upon to adapt their roles and operating styles to new financial and political realities After examining the evolving role of the MDBs from the U S perspective Upton describes the U S policy process toward the banks and assesses its strengths and weaknesses She then sets out recommendations for improving the process and looks at the broader more general lessons for U S policy formulation on multilateral institutions An important assessment for scholars researchers and policy makers involved with international relations and economic policy

Human Rights and U.S. Foreign Policy in the Multilateral Development Banks Daniel B. Braaten, 2012 Promoting human rights is an important foreign policy goal for the United States There are many foreign policy areas through which the U S promotes human rights including voting against countries which violate human rights in the Multilateral Development Banks MDBs Promoting human rights however is not the only foreign policy goal of the U S in the MDBs The U S also seeks strategic goals such as supporting allies and promoting domestic economic prosperity as well in the

MDBs Realist international relations theory posits that strategic interests will trump promoting human rights in the MDBs For the U S however liberal international relations theory argues that promoting human rights can be considered an equivalent foreign policy goal for countries such as the U S Therefore strategic interests will not automatically trump promoting human rights for the U S This dissertation seeks to answer two questions regarding human rights in U S foreign policy in the MDBs First what role do human rights play in determining U S votes in the MDBs Here I find that a country s record on violating political rights is a significant factor in determining whether the U S will vote in favor of proposals for that country A country s record on violating rights of personal integrity however is not a significant factor Whether a country receives military aid from the U S and a country s GDP per capita are also significant determinants of U S votes in the MDBs The second question this dissertation answers regarding human rights in U S foreign policy in the MDBs is what rights specifically does the U S promote in the MDBs and which countries specifically does the U S vote against because of their human rights record Overall I find that while the U S has voted against loans going to many countries for human rights purposes the bulk of U S attention is centered on countries that fail to apprehend war criminals within their borders primarily Serbia and voting against loans that go to China
