Welfens, 2012-12-06 After a decade of Eurosclerosis the EC is moving with renewed economic growth and increasing multinational investment toward a single European market under the heading Project 1992 The creation of a single EC market creates dynamic adjustment needs and opens up new opportunities for international business in a period of intensified global competition and dramatic politico economic changes Since the mid 1980s Eastern Europe is undergoing a radical shift towards market based economic systems a difficult and fragile development so far which is further complicated by economic and political unification of Germany in central Europe After the era of British and later U S leadership in multinational investment German and Japanese multinational companies are becoming more influential players worldwide Firms from Germany play a special role because German unification of 1990 implies a bigger home market but also the diversion of total investment activities towards the greater German home market While the political divide of Europe has ceased to exist the economic division is becoming more apparent and it could indeed transitorily increase because the EC 1992 project primarily generates growth impulses in Western Europe while systemic transformations in Eastern Europe reduce output growth in the short term Strategies of Multinationals and Competition for Foreign Direct extraordinary and positive impact of MNC s in Eastern Europe and the former Soviet union during the transition to free market capitalism The book also attempts to answer why the impact of MNC s in Eastern Europe should be different to the less commendable experience in Africa and Latin America and whether MNC s reinforce the power of corrupt rulers In concluding that MNC s are not necessarily the enemy of development but can be instrumental to progress the book draws on lessons from 21 East European transition countries to show how the economic power of MNC s can be harnessed elsewhere in the developing world

The Organization of European Multinationals Dalia Marin,2012 Recent literature on international trade has established that the most productive firms become multinationals But our data reveal a startling variation in productivity levels of foreign affiliates across the countries in Eastern Europe of the same European multinational parent firms suggesting that not all multinationals transplant their home productivity advantage to the new EU Member States and Emerging Europe One candidate for this startling difference in productivity levels among foreign affiliates is the ability of European multinationals to transport their business model abroad This paper examines the conditions under which European multinationals give autonomy to their subsidiaries and delegate authority to them We also analyse the conditions under which European multinationals transplant their business model to Eastern Europe We collect original and unique matched parent and affiliate data on the internal organization of 660 German and Austrian parent firms and 2200 of their subsidiaries in Eastern Europe including the former Soviet Union We test the hypothesis that the ability of European multinationals to transplant their business model to foreign affiliates is determined by the organization of European multinationals on the one hand and the market environment their affiliate firms face in Eastern Europe on the other hand We show that the business culture of parent firms accounts for about 50 percent of the variation of the organization of subsidiaries while the market environment of subsidiaries contributes the rest

Multinationals and Transition J. Manea,R. Pearce,2004-03-03 This book refocuses thinking on how multinational enterprises MNEs can achieve a sustained contribution to European transition economies as these countries move from the processes of transformation into pursuit of more sustained development The authors apply key aspects of recent work on the strategic aims and nature of the contemporary MNE to the transition economy context and find that the generation and application of technology has particular relevance to the success of MNEs in Central and Eastern Europe The book is based on the results of two new wide ranging surveys and includes a thorough review of current literature

Cross-Border Investing Julia Djarova,2007-05-08 Cross Border Investing The Case of Central and Eastern Europe offers a view that reflects two main hypotheses You cannot understand foreign direct investment FDI trends and developments unless you understand the company s motives to invest You cannot understand a company s cross border investment decision making unless you understand what the investment area offers This is the reason why this text builds up a relationship between the world of companies decision makers and that of the policy makers in the public sector It does so by linking the business processes to the factors that together constitute the location profile of a country or a region Based on more than 15 years of practical experience as well as research in the field of FDI Dr Julia Djarova offers a Cross Border Investment Model to describe the logic behind the decision making process concerning foreign investments made by companies The model is illustrated by a number of case studies of multinationals
