Normative Discourse:

Normative Discourse Paul W. Taylor,1961 Normative Discourse and Persuasion Michael R. Walrod,1988 A study of the discourse of Ga dang a Philippine language focuses on normative discourse and persuasion especially the ways in which the former is used to accomplish the latter The first five chapters outline the theoretical framework of the study placing normative and persuasive discourse in a philosophical context and relating them to the fields of cognitive science to neuropsychology and to the study of the consequences of literacy to provide an explanation for the substantial differences between Ga dang normative discourse and that of Western society The conciliatory nature of dispute settlement in Ga dang is examined in relation to the sociology or ethnology of law and social control The normative discourse of dispute settlement is seen as intended to produce group harmony and consensus Subsequent chapters narrow the focus on normative discourse to those elements central to discourse analysis and particularly to a distinct type of normative discourse in Ga dang informal litigation The textual characteristics of a substantial portion of one litigation appended are identified and the strategies of persuasion used are discussed A scale of normativity is used to rank the features of Ga dang normative discourse and the results are analyzed MSE varieties of normativity that we are subject to contends that there is no conflict between normativity and the world as science describes it. The authors argue that normative claims aim to evaluate to urge us to do or not do something and to tell us how a state of affairs ought to be. These claims articulate forms of action guidance that are different in kind from descriptive claims with a wholly distinct practical and expressive character. This account suggests that there are no normative facts and so nothing that needs any troublesome shoehorning into a scientific account of the world. This work explains that nevertheless normative claims are constrained by the world and answerable to reason and argumentation in a way that makes them truth apt and objective.

Normative Discourse and Social Negotiation Samia Hesni, 2019 This dissertation lies at the intersection of philosophy of language, social and political and feminist philosophy. The first half of the dissertation is primarily about the ways language can be used to stereotype, denigrate, oppress or otherwise harm. The second half is about how language can be used to resist and undermine those harms. In the four chapters of my dissertation I examine the ways in which language can shape the social world. Language allows people to reinforce social norms and systems like sexism, racism and oppression more broadly. But it also allows people to disrupt these systems. I argue that it is worth looking seriously at the linguistic mechanisms by which individuals can do both and the social and political systems in place that enable such language use in the first place. Only by combining the two can we start to get the full story about language, oppression and power. Within this broad research program I am specifically interested in implicit discourse language that indirectly or implicitly communicates one thing while explicitly stating another. Implicit language is extremely important to understand various mechanisms of linguistic harm and oppression. Chapter 1 examines normative generics like boys don't cry whose utterances often carry with them an injunction that boys not cry or a condemnation of crying boys. When someone utters a normative generic like women stay at home and raise families they are reinforcing a harmful social norm without explicitly using any evaluative terms like should, good, right. In Chapter 2 I problematize philosophical views on silencing and introduce a new concept of linguistic harm, illocutionary frustration, that occurs when a hearer treats a speaker as though she does not have standing to say what she is saying. In Chapter 3 I give a meta philosophical analysis of socially informed philosophy of language. In it I argue that in the service of intellectual inquiry and social justice we would do well to incorporate types of social situatedness into our methodological frameworks. I end in Chapter 4 by reviewing the ways in which social scripts play pivotal roles in enabling interpersonal subjugation and offer a way out.

Good Sex Raymond A. Belliotti, 1993 Rules about sexuality, written and unwritten, have existed in every culture as have disagreements over what is and isn't acceptable. Must morally permissible sex have only one function? Must it be heterosexual? Must it occur within the confines of the institution of marriage? Must it be accompanied by requisite emotions such as love and intimacy?
