Healthcare Organizations Carmen Raimondo, 2018-03-10 With this work the topic of Risk Management in Healthcare organizations will be analyzed. It is intended as an integrated process through which determine and manage the risks that potentially contribute to erode value created by strategic and operational decision taken. The concept of risk is evoked more often at a global level to underline that management has the task of considering all risks that could hinder the achievement of pre established objectives. These risks can question the general strategy pursued by the company to protect both individual and collectivity. The goal is to develop a security oriented strategy that improve the perception by the user/patient about the quality of the services provided. This strategy must be consistent with the acceptable level of risk that the company must consider to achieve its objectives and its mission. It is also necessary to identify the appropriate tools to achieve the risk reduction at the desired levels and to ensure the continuous improvement of clinical practice and quality through the involvement of all clinical and organizational professionals. Risk Management, Liability Insurance, and Asset
