Berger, 1985 In this provocative contribution to both psychoanalytic theory and the philosophy of science Louis Berger grapples with the nature of consequential theorizing i e theorizing that is relevant to what transpires in clinical practice By examining analysis as a genre of state process formalism the standard format of scientific theories Berger demonstrates why contemporary theorizing inevitably fails to explain crucial aspects of practice His critique in this respect pertains both to the formal structure of psychoanalytic explanation and the technical language through which this structure gains expression The pragmatic recommendations that issue from this critique are illustrated with respect to a number of perennial problem areas besetting analysis and cognate disciplines In a discussion that encompasses theories of affect issues in family therapy the nature of first language acquisition and the philosophical topics of free will and determinism Berger shows that certain systems of representation including ordinary language can describe the psychological realm adequately and that such systems necessarily follow modern physics in rejecting naive assumptions about the separability of theory and practice His proposals culminate in a nonhierarchical conception of psychoanalytic theory that assigns a separate status to the clinically pragmatic level of theorizing In both his critique of contemporary analysis and his reconstructive proposals Berger fuses into a highly readable argument a fascinating range of insights culled from epistemology linguistics physics logic computer science history and aesthetics More impressively still he demonstrates how an investigation of psychoanalytic theory can serve as a vehicle for examining pervasive epistemological issues in both philosophy and the social sciences
